

EDITORIAL NOTE

The Law Review is pleased to include its second monograph in this issue. Monograph 2 in our series is a major analysis of a recent Court of Appeal decision on the question of pre-trial discovery of police witnesses' evidence.

The Law Review gratefully acknowledges the support of Russell McVeagh McKenzie Bartleet & Co, barristers and solicitors of Auckland, which has made possible the publication of this special issue of the Review.